

NARGIS

Starting with my name, Nargis, born in the year 2000 in a province not far from the capital of Afghanistan, Wardak, a year later, my family and I moved to Kabul as Afghanistan was free from the Taliban.

I have five brothers, my father is working with ARCS, and my mother is a housewife; I don't have a sister, but my brothers and my friends never made me feel sad about it, as they have been close to me loved me very much.

I lived my childhood in Kabul Macroyan, a beautiful place with my family. I was brilliant and always played with my brothers, wearing boys' clothes; those were the happy days of my life. Then we moved to Afshar, close to ARCS, where my father was working, and the school was close to our house; I was enrolled in school and finished in 2017.

The school was the best place where I learned primary education and made some friends, which are the best things that have ever happened.

After school, I could not continue higher education for almost two years. I was trying to study, but due to restrictions that my family applied to me because of the lousy security issues Kabul was facing, they did not let me go to university. I took the Kankor exam to enroll in a university and was accepted to the journalism department, where I have studied for some time; that was amazing. University was much bigger than a school for me, and there were many skills to learn. I have made friends, improved my social skills, learned about the importance of higher education and having a higher degree for a promising career and future, and how that can help me reach my goals. However, the university was far from my home, and inadequate security, lack of transport, and financial issues did not let me continue and finish university. I was trying to go to university and study as I love to study, make a beautiful life, and help people through my education. I started a private college, studying computer science. The period of college was two years, during which I learned a lot about the importance of technology and how it is shaping our world, which facilities and challenges we are having now due to technology. Still, I could not study as I wanted due to lousy security and financial problems. That made me sad.

I heard about Afghan Scout from my brother, who was in Afghan Scout, that girls could also join and study there, so I joined Afghan Scout, and since 2020, I have been a member of Afghan Scout, participating in Afghan Scout programs.
